How do you advocate for under-represented or marginalized students in your school?

“ Having been an English Language Learner and immigrant, I strive to ensure all learners have access to quality programming. To foster a school culture that is both identity affirming and reflective of all, I build relationships by being visible, connecting with students through personal lived experiences and responding to their individual needs in a culturally responsive way. I want our students to feel that they matter and to see that people of all identities can be in positions to make positive and impactful changes every day. ”
