Principal, Equity and Inclusion
Upper Canada District School Board

How do you work with community partners to create more engaging learning for students?

“ By building relationships with local community partners, students make use of transferrable skills such as creativity, critical-thinking, communication and collaboration to address challenges in their local communities. When students work with educators and community partners to center themselves in meaningful problems, and make a positive impact in their community, student engagement in reading, writing, math, science and the arts can soar. ”
